In this course we shall work systematically through the elements of Ancient Greek grammar as they are presented in Chase & Phillips, A New Introduction to Greek. Learning Greek grammar can serve any of a number of purposes; but the chief object of this course will be to prepare the student for reading texts in Classical or Koine (New Testament) Greek in subsequent years.

Class will meet daily and be divided between presenting new grammar and going over material previously assigned. It will be important to appear prepared in class regularly. This is not the kind of course one can begin to take seriously only after a few weeks into the term. There will be fairly frequent quizzes and tests. In determining the course grade, the quality and consistency of a student’s oral participation and written homework exercises will be considered along with regular written quizzes, tests and the mid-term and final exams.

Students should acquaint themselves with the conditions governing enrollment, performance, and evaluation in university course work set out in the University of Montana Catalogue, Schedule of Classes, and Student Conduct Code. I am as a professional matter interested in your educational and professional development. Do not hesitate to consult with me (at regular office hours or other times by appointment) if you want advising or help.
