Course Description:
Women from the Sticks: Reading Eudora Welty, Louise Erdrich and Alice Munro. In this class, we will function as writers/investigators who ask these kinds of questions: Is there a relationship between rural sensibilities and fictional form? Do narratives focused on close-knit communities employ a distinctive sense of time? We will look very closely at the work of these writers and several others. You will write responses to the readings; do imitations; give a talk that poses an interesting question, and expand upon the talk in an essay of 7-10 pages.

Learning Outcomes:
1. That you leave the class with a strong sense of how these writers, in their fiction, interacted with their physical and social environments and with their positions (as a Southerner, a Native American and a Canadian, respectively) beyond the borders of American urban literary culture.
2. That this close reading and the discussions that result will enhance your ability to shape your own fiction in interesting, possibly new, ways.

Required Textbooks:
Required Assignment and Tests:
- Close reading of three stories per week. A 2-page (or longer) response to one of them. An imitation can be substituted for two of the responses during the course of the semester.
- A verbal presentation in class that explores the work of one of the writers in some depth.
- A final essay based on the verbal presentation.
- Outside reading, from time to time, that is intended to further illuminate the work of these writers.

Course Guidelines and Policies:
Because you are graduate students in a highly selective program with a strong studio component, I assume that you are invested, motivated, talented, learn-by-doing adults. You will get a high grade if you read carefully, respond intelligently, and participate energetically. If, at any time, you want my assessment of what your grade is precisely ---and why --please talk to me.

Student Conduct Code
Please familiarize yourself with the Student Conduct Code site: http://www.umt.edu/vpsa/policies/student_conduct.php

Attendance
Do not come to class late. Missing more than two classes without consulting with me will lower your final grade by a letter.
